GENESE0 — The men and machines represent a different time, when family farms meant row crops and livestock, hen houses and morning chores.

It meant strapping on overalls before sunrise and coming out to breakfast, worn shoe leather shuffling off floors onto dirt yards to milk cows. It meant big gardens and fruit trees, canning in mason jars, storing crops in root cellars.

Frank Claeys, 98, of Aledo, remembers those days. Ron Miller, 78, of Geneseo, also has soil in his nails. To read the complete story click the following link.
